v1 I look upon your beauty, and I know
That deep within your substance is a flow
Which very soon will summon up and show
Your certainty and warmth, a steady glow
Which tells me that your love's begun to grow-
But still in time to come your blood will slow.

v2 And though you lie now in a realm of peace,
I know that steady pumping will increase,
Pounding at me urgently to ease
The wrappings from your body, to release
Your being from that thin and skimpy fleece-
But still in time to come your heart will cease.

v3 You slip your gown off slowly, to reveal
Your naked breast, so silky, as a seal,
Ooh, and smooth as velvet, calling for the feel
Of eager hands, to make those buds congeal
And scream for satisfaction as you kneel-
But still in time your skin will flake and peel.

v4 And when I find that moist and tender spot,
Your body is a furnace, fresh and hot,
A lime-kiln which will fire my aching pot,
And harden it with everything it's got-
But still in time to come your flesh will rot.

v5 And strong, within that frail and feeble crust,
Your sturdy frame absorbs my rampant lust,
It soaks and savours each delightful thrust-
But still in time to come your bones will rust,
The worms of time will grind them into dust.

v6 You lie content, forever on your face,
Eternity shines through that last embrace-
But still in time you'll vanish without a trace.
