CODA

106	Bb	C	Dm	Am7
110	Bb	C	Dm

v1 There's no chill upon the air,
Where kinder sun once shone,
No hint of nightfall easing out the day;
And all he failed to notice
In the world outside his head
Obscured by what he thought he knew instead;

Ch1 It might have been so different
If he'd stopped to think it through,
Looked for things that all the others knew,
Yet even in the twilight
Of an ever-fading sky,
The dormouse slumbers on;

v2 There's no trail of quiet despair
From promise all but gone,
No sense of something slipping clean away;
And all he couldn't touch there
In the world beyond his face,
Obscured by what he grasped at in their place;

v3 It could have been quite different
If he'd woken up before,
Saw the things that all the others saw;
Yet shaded by the colour
Of a world that passed him by,
The dormouse slumbers on.
